There are far to many memories that I could share about this woman whom Iâ€™ve coveted her beauty, smile and all around essence since I was young. She had that it factor and it was magical to watch. The memory I think I will cherish the most happened the last week of her precious life. She was laying on her side and I was laying my hand on a pillow next to her, face to face but I was sitting on a chair at the side of the bed. She opened her eyes looked at me, then placed her hand on the side of my face and said â€œmy loveâ€ I looked at her and said â€œMY loveâ€ and then she said â€œok, we shareâ€. I have not been able to allow myself to fully think of her not being here yet because it is that painful to even consider it true. I just keep holding on to her love and strength and words of wisdom and I use it to keep me moving forward. I am so proud to share roots with this beautiful woman just like I am proud to share them with my mother and theirs. We are so lucky .
