Nana was my biggest guide growing up, no matter what the problem was, she listened and never judged. My parents taught me work-ethic, morals, values, and so much more; Nana taught me how to truly enjoy life and how to use the tools I was given to become who I would be happiest with. She showed me how to love the little moments in life, the importance of remembering the happy times and how they get us through the harder parts. Nana did this mostly through photos, which now I appreciate more than I ever have before. The stacks of albums and cd's I have accumulated over the years may hurt to look through, but they remind me to appreciate my loved ones even more. I hope someday I have as many photos of myself, my family, coworkers, and everyone in between; that someday I can sit down and flip through them, telling wild, crazy stories to my loved ones. I could have posted a hundred pictures and it wouldn't have properly summarized how full of life, love, and color Nana was. So I went with the ones that show how many adventures she took us on, how she embraced our passions and fueled our love for finding what makes us happy. I have already lived a very fulfilling life, with many adventures not many others have been on, and I wouldn't have it any other way. Because Nana was right, you need to embrace your happiness and live life to the fullest. I really hope I can do you proud, Nana. I really miss you, and I know many, many others do as well. But if any of my guardian angels would literally fight for me, I know it's you, and life is a lot less scary with you with me. I love you Nana

Though her smile is gone forever
And her hand I cannot touch
I still have so many memories
Of the one I loved so much.
Her memory is now my keepsake
Which with Ill never part.
God has her in his keeping
I have her in my heart.
Sadly missed, but never forgotten.
Love you always Aunt JoAnn. Love Jennifer

Dear JoAnn, our sweet sister, how do I write one memory that can suffice for a lifetime of love? What is important to me is that we share parents and siblings, cousins, nieces and nephews. We are and always will be family. Love always, Beth
