Hi, Thaddy! It's Mama. I'm 55 years old today. Yesterday, Auntie Lorna came by at work to give me orange flowers. One of my favorite colors! (O-gen, like you used to say when you were two.) How singularly thoughtful of Auntie! Yesterday was also the Second Year Anniversary of your Wake. So when Papa, Tessa, and I came to visit you, we decided to bring you Auntie Lorna's flowers. They look very cheerful with all the other flowers and plants. We think Auntie Lorna would be perfectly touched, and understand. She's such a good friend. (Thank you also to your friend who brought you yellow bird of paradise and beer! S/he remembers you well!) Auntie Kim at work wished me a very fond and heartfelt birthday, too, earlier this week, and I wanted to tell you that. Auntie Kim is the one who brings us bakery goods sometimes, and we all know how much we love bakery goods! Thaddy says, "Thank you, Auntie Kim, for making my mama so happy on her birthday week!" And finally, I wanted to tell you that Auntie Shannon at work asked me about you, too, as we walked together on campus yesterday. (I don't think you met her, which is why her asking about you on your 2nd anniversary is so coincidentally special to me.) I am going to thank her so, too, later this weekend "the coincidence will likely astonish her. Anyway. These are my thoughts, Thaddeus, on this day. I hope you are all those things I keep thinking about. I know you are. I will see you again, okay, My Thaddy Bear. Love you always. Mama

Dear Thaddy, Today is the One-Year Anniversary of your Funeral Mass and Burial. (It is also the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary.) Yesterday was the One-Year Anniversary of your Drive Through Wake. Mama is full of tears, sorrow, and love remembering all of this. I love you always, My Thaddy Bear. Everyday, I think about all the days of your life. Please continue to pray for all of us. I miss you with all my heart. Huggs and Car-ry you always, Mama
